"Nancy's paintings investigate beauty through color that soothes the eye, spirit and soul."

-Daniel Brown

Neville herself is a Cincinnati, grew up in Indian Hill, and is an Ursuline graduate ("very strong art department"). An early influence were classes at the Art Museum ("when I was eight years old"). She attended the University of Cincinnati, studying what was then called advertising but is now graphic design. "I took every art course I could. Many classes from Bob Fabe and Reginald Grooms, later Jack Meanwell and Don Dennis. All were big influences for me." She and Bruce clearly enjoy sharing their artistic lives. "Our best time is painting on site together, especially when we travel to Michigan, to Charleston, or down into Kentucky."

The Woman's Art Club of Cincinnati also is an important part of her art life. This venerable association, established more than a century and a quarter ago, helps to give structure to the artistic lives of its members through workshops, exhibitions and the exchange of useful information. It's a useful reminder that women have been making art for a long time, with devotion and often admirable skill. Nancy Nordloh is a prime example.
